The RTX Telecom Group has acquired the activities of the development company Knuisgaard Teknik ApS

Summary: The RTX Telecom Group has acquired the activities of Knuisgaard Teknik ApS, Bredsten, which primarily include the current development of a special radio communication system to be used in small and medium-sized planes.

With effect from 1 October 2004, the RTX Telecom Group has acquired the activities of Knuisgaard Teknik ApS, Bredsten.

The activities of Knuisgaard Teknik ApS primarily include the current development of a special radio communication system using the 112MHz – 137MHz frequency band. The system can be used for purposes such as navigation and communication between planes and, based on GPS information via satellites and data communication between planes and the ground, the position and location of planes can be established three-dimensionally. When the system has been installed, the pilot of a plane will be able to see the precise positions of planes in the surrounding air, and it will also help improve safety during manoeuvres in airport areas such as take-off and landing.

The activities of Knuisgaard Teknik ApS are relatively modest compared to the current scope of business in the RTX Telecom Group.

The acquisition is expected to provide a positive contribution to the earnings of the RTX Telecom Group for the financial year 2005/06 and subsequent years. For the financial year 2004/05 the acquisition is expected to have a slightly negative impact on the Group's earnings.
