RTX Telecom's claim upheld by French court

On 15 January 2002, Le Tribunal de Commerce de Paris (Commercial Court of Paris) handed down its judgement in a suit filed by RTX Telecom against a French customer. The objective of these proceedings was to test, by submission to a court, the legitimacy of the customer's termination of a development contract in relation to the existing agreement.

According to the terms of the judgement made, the customer has been ordered to pay a sum of approximately DKK 24 million to RTX Telecom. In its verdict, the court established that the customer's termination violated the procedures agreed to in the contract.

The case is described in more detail in the RTX Telecom bulletin of the annual report 14/2001 of 13 December 2001.

RTX Telecom does not regard the case as closed, as the customer may appeal to a higher court. RTX Telecom has not yet received the exact wording of the judgement.

The possible impact of this judgement has not been incorporated into the company's forecast for the final result of the current financial year.
